Preface and Introduction

The records in the eight series that are described in this discography have a number of things in common. They had black labels, most of them were recorded in foreign countries and very few of them are in English. Most of them were released between 1902 and 1910 and they have always been scarce. Describing them was difficult because very little of the documentation could be found in the Victor archives stored in New York City. Two English discographers, Alan Kelly and John Milmo provided me with data for almost all of the European recordings and I am grateful as well as fortunate to have been involved with those two gentlemen.

The Victor Talking Machine Company often created blocks of numbers that they assigned to records that had similar styles of music or different record sizes. They did not always stick to the original plan. For example, operatic music can be found in almost every one of the series listed in this discography. Actually, each of the blocks was probably intended to appeal to ethnic groups. Very few of the records are English language recordings.

It is noteworthy that some of the records in these series were issued later as double-sided records here and in Europe, and a few of them in the 61000 and 71000 series were reissued with Victor red seal labels in 1908. I have attempted to list the recordings that were reissued with alternative catalog numbers here and in Europe. It is also true that most of the records play at speeds other than 78-RPM, and a variable speed turntable and a variety of needle sizes are required to hear them in pitch at their proper speed. Victor record players called Victrolas could be adjusted to play records at different speeds and the company always advertised the use of fresh needles.

Some of the Victor labels have unusual translations of the songs, and some of them have incorrect spelling and punctuation of the foreign titles. An attempt has been made to present accurate titles and to identify the people who wrote the songs and their lyrics. The titles for classical music were verified in the IMSLP database, a remarkable resource for any discographer. It is unfortunate that Alan Kelly, as prolific as he was, did not list accompaniments or composers for many of the Gramophone Company (HMV) recordings that he listed. It is safe to assume that if it sounds like singers with an orchestra, it probably is an orchestra on those recordings.

The Victor Talking Machine Company manufactured records in the Western Hemisphere and many of these records were sold here in the countries and islands where they would have the most appeal. Argentina and Cuba were probably the most active markets. The Victor Company also reached out to communities with larger numbers of immigrants in their effort to market these records in the United States.

Record Surfaces

The Victor Talking Machine Company (VTMC) pressed information in the area next to labels. Catalog numbers were embossed above the label and take numbers at the 9 o'clock side of the label. A symbol in fine print was pressed near the catalog number above the label to indicate which metal part was used to press the record. A small letter A represented the original stamper. This is not to be confused with the letters A and B assigned to sides of double-sided records. The Victor Company changed stampers before they were worn out, and when stampers were replaced the stamper designations continued in alphabetical order. Many collectors prefer a pressing from an A plate, but records from new stamper Z, for example, were as good as the first editions.

A number of the records were transcribed and marked with the symbol S/8. It is assumed that the method of copying the original records was with a pantographing process, not a re-recording of the original record. There is very little audible difference between those that were transcribed and those pressed from original stampers. Very few of the pantographed stamper versions were used in Europe by the Gramophone Company, but the HMV catalog numbers are listed in the discography whether they were or not they were transcribed. I marked the Victor catalog numbers with the letters Tr. to identify the transcribed copies.

It is also a fact that the Victor Company often assigned catalog numbers to records that they did not publish, and many of those catalog numbers were reassigned to different recordings. I attempted to identify all of the unpublished records, and I marked them with the letters NR (not released). The other symbol I often used is NL (not listed) and it indicates that the record companies failed to list something important. The dates listed are abbreviated if I could not ascertain that actual day that a recording was made. Some other publications list dates that the recordings were approved or issued, but not the actual date. There are a few recordings that were issued with alternate takes. The artists would return to the studio and make a better version. I marked them as Type 2 in the margin next to the catalog number.

Amendments and Honorable Mentions

Corrections and amendments are always gratefully received. The Discography of American Historical Recordings site (DAHR), and it's director David Seubert, would benefit from well-documented revisions to any of the listings in this discography. That site is also the source of quite a few online discographies that I have compiled describing Victor Talking Machine Company and RCA Victor records. My hardback books, so beautifully produced by Allan Sutton and his company Mainspring Press, often appear on EBay for very flattering prices. I am especially grateful for the encouragement I received, and the online presentation of this discography by David Schmutz.
